BONNIE & CLYDE

A white smile and dark thought
The women fall as the men fold
The scores are tallied, as the night grows old
The hustler's time is all the same
The play of life is just, just a game

Another dusk falls on a nameless town
A diamond life is on the prowl
A lonely knight in black leather boots
He ain't gonna lose Tonight someone else will sing, sing the blues

The cards are shuffled, and the dice will roll
The rack will crack even as you fall
What you gonna do man when you grow
old?

The hustler's style will never change
Are you playing life or just, playing a game

A broad smiles with dark red lips
She floats on by, with undulating hips Hooded eyes follow every move, every move she makes They're putty in her hands, this little girl little lady little woman's on, on the make...

She's all made up, anywhere to go....
Check out the back of the hands
She's scared of growing old
The hustle and the grift, are done taken their toll
For a gal on the game it's all the same Better not to think, keep yourself in out, in out of the cold.

Her broken dreams, reflect a troubled life
A happy young child buried under years and years of strife
What you gonna do girl when you grow old?
The hustler's style will never change

Are you playing life or just, playing the game?

Together at last, they headed South
Robbing and cheating, living hand to mouth
A hellbound train, whistles in the night
They'll never go down without a fight
All they knew was living fast, fast and wide

Side by side, they were laid to rest
Modern day tale of Romeo and Juliet Their bodies were riddled with a thousand needle holes
Like Bonnie and Clyde twas all the same,
This frolic of life was just, just a game.

Empires will rise and they will fall
But their legend lives on and on and the tales are told
Then what's the use of growing old?

The hustler's style will never change
Are you playing life or just, just a [game]

The hustler's style will never change
Are you cheating life or playing just a game?

The hustler's style will never change
Are you cheating life or playing just a game?
